Birthed on social media, Black Rainbow has come a long way. Indeed, the visibility of Indigenous people of diverse sexualities and genders has increased significantly. As too, have the conversations.

Black Rainbow uses its reach to elevate and spotlight members of the Indigenous LGBTIQSB (Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Trans, Intersex, Queer, Sistergirl, Brotherboy) community members. We also use our reach to educate and inform on issues not only faced by the Indigenous LGBTIQSB but also current events about Indigenous people of Australia.

Black Rainbow was initially created so that any Indigenous LGBTIQSB member of our community who felt isolated or alone could access the Black Rainbow on social media and see themselves represented positively and as part of a larger community of Indigenous LGBTIQSB people. It didn’t matter if they were in a remote community, a regional town or the suburbs of a major city.

Now in our 8th year, we have grown from simply being a social media presence to the country’s first and only national Indigenous LGBTIQSB organisation. We take great pride in how far we have come. From our humble beginnings online, we have learnt how valuable platforms like Facebook and Instagram can be as tools of elevation, celebration, education and inclusion. What is most important is keeping the social media experience of our communities safe for all. We wanted to use our experience and what we have learnt along the way to contribute to strengthening to the Facebook and Instagram ‘Safe and Strong’ Guide. See our tips on Page 24.

We are late adopters to Instagram, but we have seen our account grow from 150 followers twelve months ago, to currently just over 11.3K. We have achieved this by taking what we have learnt from our experiences via the Black Rainbow Facebook page and duplicated these into how we curate our Instagram account. One that is a safe space for all to engage.

Facebook and Instagram can be a great place for minorities, such as Indigenous LGBTIQSB people, to find belonging, feel connected and connect, seek out and offer support, educate, and inform.

We hope that our participation in this guide will contribute to making Facebook and Instagram more accessible to Indigenous LGBTIQSB people, so they too can feel safe and secure when doing so.

ACON

Social media can play an important role in our lives. It offers a place for self-expression, community connection, acceptance and belonging. This is often profoundly true for people of diverse sexualities and genders, many of whom find communities through platforms such as Facebook and Instagram. Social media transcends geographical boundaries. No matter where you are, no matter what city, suburb or country town, social media is a great place to connect with our inclusive and diverse communities.

But social media is not without its downsides. While there may be affirming content and conversations, it can also be a source of negativity and hostility about who we are and how we love, sometimes from within our own communities, which can have detrimental impacts on our health and wellbeing.

As Australia’s largest organisation specialising in HIV and the health of sexuality and gender diverse communities, we at ACON want to make sure the social media experiences of people in our communities is positive. That’s why we worked with Facebook and Instagram to develop this resource to support your wellbeing and to help you stay safe, to practice and express self-care online.

Facebook and Instagram provide great opportunities for our communities to connect with and support each other, exchange ideas, access resources and share information. We hope this guide helps in making your online experience enriching and empowering.

If you or someone you know in NSW needs support, contact ACON on (02) 9206 2000 or visit acon.org.au

TRANS PRIDE AUSTRALIA

Trans and gender diverse people understand the impacts of stigma, discrimination, intimidation and bullying, both online and in real life. No one deserves to be treated disrespectfully.

The Safe and Strong Guide is a useful tool to help community know what features are available for them to be able to control who they engage with online and how they want to engage.

Our trans communities are strong and resilient. Social media forms a critical role in connecting us for social and emotional support and this resource will help trans communities maintain safety online.

MINUS18

If there’s anyone that knows the importance of social media and online spaces, it’s Minus18 and our community – LGBTQIA+ young people and adults alike. Social media is an amazing, tangible way to find resources, support and a sense of community, particularly if you aren’t finding that support or social connection in person.

This was especially true when adapting to life during COVID-19 – a time of social isolation, with a profound impact on mental health and wellbeing. We completely reimagined our life-affirming, identity-celebrating youth events for a digital world, including our Melbourne and Sydney Queer Formals. In all, we held 20 digital events with over 7,000 attendees from all over Australia.

Although we would have loved to celebrate and foster that social connection in person, our social media feeds meant that LGBTQIA+ young people were able to celebrate each other and make friends, even from afar. Digital events also meant that regional and rural LGBTQIA+ youth could attend no matter their location, and that thousands of young people could access an LGBTQIA+ event and community for the very first time – even if they weren’t “out”, or supported by their families.

Making new friends, accessing resources, discovering that you’re supported by a whole community – that’s life-changing stuff. We can see it firsthand, at our digital events; in our Instagram comments; in our Minus18 Teens Facebook group; in the popularity of our online resources and articles. Social media and online communities are places where anyone can feel supported, seen and loved.

If you’re an LGBTQIA+ young person, you can join our Minus18 Teens group on Facebook.

You can also check out our upcoming events and all our resources via Instagram.

If you’re an ally, family member, or a supporter, check out minus18.org.au for more about our life-changing work.

TWENTY10

Twenty10 provides safer spaces for young LGBTIQA+ people to be themselves. We do this in our physical spaces but know it is equally important to make sure we do this in our digital spaces.

Social media is a great way to connect with other young people, make friends, build community and learn from each other as well as get information about everything that’s happening online, IRL in your city, around the country and the globe! It’s also a space where you can access up to date resources about your health and wellbeing – and find out about the support services Twenty10 and services like us around Australia offer. We love to share info from our network of partners and friends who work with young folks. During Covid we hosted Instagram live sessions, listened to our communities and created even more spaces for online connection, workshops, sharing ideas and having conversations about things that matter.

We developed our Safer Space Guidelines for being online with Twenty10 to ensure that everyone can enjoy themselves in a way that feels positive and safe. We always ask that everyone familiarise themselves with the guidelines when they can. You can read them here: twenty10.org.au/guidelines-safer-online-spaces

Twenty10 now offer weekly dedicated safer space online hangOUTS alongside our creative and skill sharing programs, we are about to launch our first online parent and carers group and our leading educational program PRISM is now also available online for schools, services, workplaces and any ally who wants to learn more. Now that our in-person services are returning – Facebook and Instagram are where we share all our updated news and info: @twenty10glcs and twenty10.org.au Get in touch!

PROTECT YOUR SPACE

You’re in control of who sees your posts on Facebook and Instagram, and you can choose your level of openness.

By switching to a private account on Instagram, you can choose who follows you and who sees the posts you share. It’s also quick and easy to check the privacy of your Facebook account, and control who sees your posts.

HOW TO

From your Instagram profile page, access your Settings menu, then select Privacy. Scroll to Private Account and move the slider to the right. The slider will turn blue once the account is private.

Privacy Checkup guides you through some of your privacy and security settings, so you can review your choices to help make sure that you’re sharing with who you want. To access this feature, click the ••• button on your Facebook profile, and select View Privacy Shortcuts.
Instead of the main upload tool, click on the Instagram Direct or Messenger icon in the top right corner and choose which specific people will receive your photo or video. With Stories, you can select individual followers or groups to share with, and you can identify a group of Close Friends to share any Story with instead of posting publicly.

To set up your Close Friends list, click on the menu button in the top-right of your profile, and choose Close Friends. You can view and edit the people in your Close Friends list here.

You can use the Audience Selector tool most places you share status updates, photos and other things you post. Click the drop-down menu above the Post button and select who you want to share something with.

Options for Audiences include:
- Public
- Friends
- Friends Except (to ensure specific people do not view your post)
- Specific Friends (to choose a smaller group of people to view your post)
- Only Me
It’s okay if you need a break from someone you follow, on Instagram you can use Mute to hide someone’s posts. They won’t be notified you’ve muted them, and you can simply unmute them when you want to see what they’re up to again.

On Facebook, you can Snooze a person, group or page to see less of them in your Newsfeed. Snoozing a person, Page or group prevents you from seeing their posts in your News Feed for 30 days.

HOW TO

To Mute someone, tap the menu in the corner of that person’s post. You can choose whether to mute feed posts, story posts, or both.

To Snooze someone, click to on the top-right of one of their posts, and select Snooze. The person, Page or group you’ve snoozed won’t know that they’ve been snoozed. You can un-Snooze them at any time before the 30 days is up.
It’s ok to need space online and to seek digital distance from friends, particularly if you’re not finding joy or connection together. The impact of the pandemic means we may have less energy than we used to for people online, and that’s okay.

Making sure you have energy for yourself is important too. If you decide it’s time to de-friend or unfollow someone, it might be a good idea to consider how you’ll respond if they talk to you about it. Good communication means knowing and caring for your own boundaries.

If someone does ask you, consider saying something like this:

“I’ve been finding social media a bit too busy lately so wanted to follow people I am closer to in real life”

This won’t always go down well but communicating honestly and with love can often protect us, and them, from holding all that loss and anxiety alone.

Building positive and respectful relationships online can take work, counselling support can be helpful in strengthening communication skills.
In the Instagram Settings menu, click on Your Activity. You can then view how much time you’re spending on Instagram, set daily reminders to limit the time you spend online, and mute notifications when you don’t want to be bothered.

On the Facebook App, go into your Settings & Privacy menu and then select Your Time on Facebook. You can then view how much time you’re spending on Facebook, set daily reminders to limit the time you spend online, and mute notifications when you don’t want to be bothered.

If you need to log out of your account to take a break, you can do so in the Settings menu on Facebook and Instagram.

YOUR TIME IS PRECIOUS

You can also take a break from social media, or manage how you spend your time online, with the time management tools on Instagram and Facebook.
Black Rainbow are in our 8th year of being online, and we have learnt a lot. Particularly around racism and homophobia online.

Often even discussing racism and homophobia can be traumatic for everyone, so we just don’t. It’s just one of the many things we have implemented to make Black Rainbow a safe community for all.

Here are some other tips from experiences we have learnt from over the years. We hope they can assist you if you in creating a Page or a Group on Facebook or an account on Instagram, or all three.

TIPS

- It’s good to start off with having two or more administrators of the accounts. This way, you have others that can assist with to moderating discussion.

- For Groups, identify your membership. Is it just Indigenous LGBTIQ+ only, all of the LGBTIQ+ community, or for everyone? Choose whether the group is private or public.

- Have a set of rules that members must abide by.

- There may be disagreements between members, but if the conversation becomes heated, let the participants know to cool things down.

- Suppose a person is engaging in harmful and hurtful behaviour. In that case, ask them to refrain and let them know that you will be deleting their comments (deleting the comments is a way of removing negativity from your Page or Group).

- If they persist, block.
“When you visit Black Rainbow on Facebook or Instagram, you’ll notice that we are free of racism and homophobia. Very rarely do we even discuss these two things on there. Our reason for this is simple. As Indigenous LGBTIQ+ people, we encounter these negative and harmful experiences in our day-to-day lives, so we have chosen to not bring them to our online community. As a result, our online spaces are welcoming, more inclusive, respectful and loving.”

OWN YOUR FEED

If someone you follow makes you feel bad about yourself, it may be time to unfollow or unfriend them.

No notification is sent when you unfollow or unfriend someone. Think of it as a small but powerful way to practice self-care.

On Facebook, you can also select the kinds of posts you want to see on your Newsfeed.

HOW TO

On Instagram, go to the profile of the person you’d like to unfollow and tap Unfollow.

Click the button on your Facebook app and choose Settings. Select News Feed Preferences from this menu. You can then prioritize whose posts you see first and make posts from people or Pages appear at the top of your News Feed.

You can also Unfollow a person, Page or Group, and manage your Snooze settings. When you unfriend someone, it means that activities (pictures, updates, posts) that you set to the Friends audience will no longer be seen by that person.

Additionally, their activities will not show up on your News Feed. However, they will still be able to see whatever is public on your profile, including any activities you post with a Public audience, posts made by mutual friends to your Timeline, and any comments that you post on a mutual friend’s Timeline.

They can also re-request you as a friend.
“To ensure my experience on Instagram is a positive one I follow accounts of people who I have real life personal connections with, but also things like art and comedy and education. It’s important to have the right balance, and to not get caught up in comparing your life to what you see in your feed.”
If someone is negatively impacting your experience, you can Block them. When you block someone, they’re never notified and they can no longer view your posts or search for your account. You can unblock them at any time.

If you’re not comfortable blocking someone on Instagram, you can now Restrict them — which protects your account from unwanted interactions without making the targeted person aware. Once you restrict someone, comments from that person will only be visible to that person.

HOW TO

- Tap ••• on their profile, then tap Block.

  You can restrict someone by tapping ••• on their profile, and then tapping Restrict.

- Click the downward arrow ♥ at the top-right of any Facebook page. Select Blocking and in the Block Users section, enter the name of the person you want to block and click Block. You can also go to the person’s profile and select Block from the ••• menu in the bottom right of their cover photo.

  When you block a person, they will not be able to view your Timeline activity, message or tag you, or send you another friend request (blocking automatically unfriends the person). You will also not be able to see their activity. They will still be able to see your public information and activity within apps or groups.

- In Messenger, you can also tap on a message to Ignore the conversation. This disables notifications and moves the conversation from your inbox to your Filtered Messages folder. You can read messages in the conversation without the sender seeing if they’ve been read. The sender will not be aware that you have chosen to Ignore their messages.
“One of the things I love about my followers is that they are so vocal about self-expression and bringing awareness and attention to issues within the south Asian community and the LGBTQIA+ community. There is no place on my profile for negative and horrible people. I manage them by blocking them and deleting their comments, simple as that.”
BE YOURSELF

Because Facebook and Instagram are used for different purposes, we take different approaches to names. On Instagram, you can choose whatever name you like, and use multiple accounts to express yourself freely.

Because Facebook is used to connect with family and friends, we ask that people to use the name that they are known by in the community. This helps keep the Facebook community safe from impersonation, scams and phishing.

But we know it’s important to make sure Facebook’s authentic name policy works for everyone, and that you are affirmed for who you are and the name you use in everyday life.

That’s why you can now provide additional context on why you are using a particular name, and we have changed the ID verification experience to be simpler, more compassionate, and to broaden the types of ID that can be used.

HOW TO

If you’re asked to verify your name, you can select I have a special circumstance to provide more information about why you are using that name.

There is an extensive list of ID options available, including a piece of mail, a paystub, a library card, and many more.

Facebook is committed to creating a great experience for all people. If you are blind, vision-impaired, or hearing-impaired, we’ve built a new, stronger foundation for accessibility so you can enjoy an even better experience on Facebook and Instagram.

HOW TO

We’ve added better descriptions for more on-screen elements - like buttons and checkboxes - and we revamped all of the Heading tags, allowing people using screen readers to better navigate and understand a page’s structure. We also have closed captions for video content on Facebook Watch and Live.

For more tools and information visit: fb.com/accessibility

Automatic closed captions are available in a range of languages on IGTV videos, and we encourage the inclusion of image descriptions on Instagram posts with an automatic option to include this whenever you post using Advanced Settings.

For more tools and information visit: help.instagram.com
Instagram and Facebook have a range of controls which allow you to choose who can comment on your posts, tag you, and mention you.

Select Comments in the Privacy option under Settings — there you can choose to Allow Comments From: 1) Everyone, 2) People You Follow and Your Followers, 3) just the People You Follow, or 4) Your Followers. You can also turn off comments entirely from your posts.

Control who can tag and mention you in the Settings menu. Go to Privacy then select Tags or Mentions and choose from 1) Everyone, 2) People You Follow, or 3) No One. You can also turn on the ability to manually approve all tags.

Using your Privacy settings, you can choose to approve all tags before they appear on your Timeline, limit the audience of posts that you are tagged in, and turn off the Tag Suggestions feature. You can also remove tags of yourself, although removing a tag or not approving a tag does not remove the post or photo from Facebook. Those options only allow you to control what shows up on your own Timeline.

If you are concerned about your privacy, you can use Facebook’s social reporting tool to ask the individuals to remove the photos or posts.
“Instagram showed me that I wasn’t alone and gave me a whole new family. I protect myself from negativity on Instagram by using Restrict for trolls and anyone that is transphobic or is hateful. I try my best to focus on the positive and uplifting comments and messages so that I don’t feel sad about the hate.”
ADD A FILTER

You can also enter which words, phrases, and emojis you find offensive, and any comments containing them will be automatically hidden from you. The person posting won’t be notified.

HOW TO

To manually add specific words and phrases you find offensive to be filtered out from your comments, save them in the Manual Filter option. The Offensive Comment filter is switched on by default.

We also make a Profanity Filter available for Facebook Pages, where a select number of words and phrases can be added. This filters out comments on the Page that use these words.
You can now pin up to three comments on a post to the top of a thread, helping you to control the tone by highlighting positivity. You can also delete or report comments that are negative or abusive.

HOW TO

You have options on a comment allowing you to Pin, Report, or Delete it.

To delete multiple comments at once on iOS, tap on a comment and then the dotted icon in the top right corner. Select Manage Comments and choose up to 25 comments to delete at once. Tap More Options to block or restrict accounts in bulk.

To block or restrict accounts on Android, press and hold on a comment, tap the dotted icon and select Block or Restrict.
LOOK OUT FOR YOURSELF AND OTHERS

Homophobia, biphobia, and transphobia are unacceptable, and we encourage you to report problematic content or comments whenever you see them on our platforms so we can remove them.

HOW TO

Tap ••• above the post, tap Report, and select It’s Inappropriate > Hate speech or symbols.

Tap ••• at the top of the post, select Find Support or Report Post and select the Hate speech reason for reporting. Once you’ve reported something you can check the status of your report from the Support Inbox.

If you see a post that makes you worry that someone might hurt themselves, know that you don’t have to handle it alone.

Let Instagram or Facebook know about the post and the next time the person opens the app they will see a message connecting them to support resources, such as contacting a local community organization or helpline, talking to friends, or finding additional resources.

It is completely anonymous. They will never know who reported their post. You are not telling on someone; you are helping them access support and resources.

HOW TO

Tap ••• above the post, tap Report, and select It’s Inappropriate > Self injury.

Tap ••• at the top of the post, select Find Support or Report Post and select the Hate speech reason for reporting. Once you’ve reported something you can check the status of your report from the Support Inbox.
One of the most wonderful, life-affirming ways of finding support and improving your wellbeing is connecting to like-minded people and communities. By finding your people! Even online, community makes a huge difference.

Click Groups on your Facebook menu to discover some of the popular groups near you, along with suggested groups you may like, and categories to search for groups.
If you’re an admin or a moderator of a Facebook group, there are some key tips and tricks to ensuring the safety and well-being of your members and their conversations.

TIPS

- There are two privacy options for Facebook groups: public and private. If the group is Public, anyone can see who’s in the group and what they post and comment. If the group is Private, only members can see who’s in the group and what they post and comment.

- Only group admins can change the privacy of a Facebook group. All members of your group will receive a notification if you change the privacy settings. If your group has over 5,000 members, you can not change it from private to public.

- Group admins can also choose to make their group visible or hidden. Visible allows anyone to find the group in search and other places on Facebook. Hidden means that only members can find the group in search and other places on Facebook.

- If you’re a group admin, you can choose to turn on membership approval for your group. This means admins or moderators will have to approve membership requests before someone can join the group.

- Only group admins can remove or block a member from a group. To do this, select your group and click Members in the left menu. Find the member you want to remove and select Remove from Group and/or Block Permanently. Click to check the box if you’d also like to delete posts, comments and pending member invites from the person you’d like to remove or block.

- As an admin of a group, you can approve posts before they appear in your group. In Group Settings click to check the box next to Post Approval, then click Save at the bottom. You’ll get notified when there’s pending posts for you to approve (or delete).
• If any member of the group reports a post, you’ll get a notification. This feature lets group members highlight posts for you to review for any reason (example: inappropriate or offensive posts). You can then choose to delete the post, block the member who created the post, or ignore it by removing it from the report queue. To report the post to Facebook, find the post in your group’s discussion, click and then select Report post. Keep in mind that reports are anonymous. Action will only be taken on a group or a post if this is found to violate Community Guidelines. Each report is evaluated against our Guidelines, and we do not take action simply because a post receives a large volume of reports.

• You can temporarily stop someone from posting or commenting in the group. Click on the Members option in your Group, find the person you want to mute and select Mute Member. You can select the amount of time you want to prevent the person from posting or commenting in the group. You can also mute someone from a post or comment they made in the group within that post or comment options. When you mute a group member, the next time they visit the group they’ll see that their ability to post or comment in the group has been temporarily turned off.

• Select the Group Quality option on the left menu of your group, to see actions Facebook has taken to enforce Community Standards in your group. You can view content that was removed from your group for violating Community Standards, potentially violating content (like posts or comments) and misinformation in the group. As an admin, you can take action by clicking See Details next to a Community Standards violation to see the violation history of the member who posted that content. You can then click Take Action to turn on post approval, mute, remove or block the group member.

• Group Insights provide metrics about your group, including member activity and engagement within the group. You can use Group Insights to understand how members engage within your group, see who the most active group members are, learn which posts have the most engagement, and more. To access simply click Group Insights on the left menu of your group.

“Personally, I love a block button. Followers aren’t everything. Community is. Because I’m so personal with my audience, a lot of people feel they can share their opinions with me, which I love. But sometimes, they give advice on things that overstep a boundary. Sometimes I won’t want other people seeing that comment on my post, but I know at heart they’re a loyal follower, so Restrict is a great tool. It means other people can’t see their comment, but to them, nothing has changed. At the end of the day, my biggest piece of advice is: reflect the haters! Be so glamorous that your fabulousness outshines anything anyone can throw your way.”
It can feel super exciting and affirming to connect with new people online. Especially when we meet people who have similar lived experience to us, love the same things that we do and really understand what we are talking about – both when we feel happy and connected, or when we are feeling isolated or maybe not having the best mental health time.

Whilst connecting with people online can be beneficial in this way, it’s important to remember that sometimes telling people everything about yourself and sharing really personal information about your life and experience can potentially be risky for you and also potentially triggering for the other person/people.

- Consent applies to online spaces. If you are thinking about sharing something very personal, check in with the person you are chatting to around whether or not they feel comfortable discussing those topics and if they aren’t – respect those boundaries.
- Remember these same boundaries for yourself. If a conversation is heading in a direction that you don’t feel comfortable with – feel confident to communicate that.
- Facebook and Instagram can be an amazing space to read, watch and learn. If conversations are traversing topics that you don’t have knowledge, info or the lived experience of, it’s ok to step out of those conversations and make space for those that have that lived experience knowledge or expertise.
- Oversharing can be a thing. Practice checking in with someone around the direction of a conversation.
- It can also be really discouraging or anxiety-inducing to share personal information with your new online BFF only to find your connection wane soon after. Online spaces can change really quickly. Don’t feel pressured to share everything immediately, but instead when you know and trust others.
- Avoid sharing practical personal information like your address and phone number with people that you don’t know in real life.
- Making friends is a process that takes time and sometimes online it can feel very instant. Allow connections with others, groups and communities to develop at a slower pace and evolve into spaces where you can share safely. Also remember that sometimes we want different things from online spaces- some folks love the online world, while others dip in and out.
- If someone reveals information that you feel is outside of your scope to support – communicate this, and refer them to support services that might be able to assist them. Most support services will have Facebook pages and/or Instagram accounts they can DM also.
